A care industry worker, after her employer forced her to submit to the recent mandate by government or lose her job, leaves her job. She and her twin sister(?) talk about their disappointment with the care industry for not standing up; warn that firing skilled staff members – who have genuine care for the people they look after – will only destroy an already crumbling industry; and remind us that the same people who were considered ‘essential’ and continued to work while people stayed at home are now being told they’re no longer allowed to work.
