Dr. Lawrence Palevsky is a pediatrician trained at NYU School of Medicine, and did his residency at Mt. Sinai Hospital in New York.

He recently spoke at a forum on vaccines in Connecticut, discussing the repeal of the religious exemption for childhood vaccines.

Dr. Palevsky spent the first nine years of his career working in emergency rooms running a neonatal intensive care unit.

Once he began his private practice, he began to hear:

not dozens, not hundreds, but thousands of stories from parents who took a very healthy child into their doctor's office, and then found that their child lost much of their health.

Whether it was their speech, whether it was seizures, whether it was death, whether it was asthma, allergies, eczema – whether it was autism, whether it was learning disabilities, whether it was inflammatory bowel disease, autoimmune diseases.

And every one of those parents were told it had nothing to do with the vaccine.

Being trained in medical school to think critically, he began to investigate the science of vaccines, since that had not been taught in medical school.

Today, he has viewed the outcomes of families who do not vaccinate their children for over 20 years. And he states:

They are the healthiest children I have ever seen.

Dr. Palevsky also states:

Unvaccinated children have never been proven to start an epidemic.
