This short article is so significant that I decided to make it the focus of today's blog. The article was spotted and shared by V.T., one of our oldest and regular contributors of articles and stories.

In a nutshell, the Japanese Ministry of Health has broken ranks, and will now insist that warnings be attached to the covid injections warning of adverse reactions:

There is something in this short article that caught my eye, beyond the importance of the Japanese Health Ministry admitting that adverse reactions are high enough, and serious enough, to warrant a warning be attached to the injections. What caught my eye, however, was the last paragraph of the article:

The (Japanese Health) ministry, which convened a group of experts on December 4 on the issue, proposed to warn of the risk by printing the words "serious side effects" on documents attached to vaccines.

It will also require hospitals to report in detail incidents involving people who developed symptoms within 28 days of their vaccination, according to the law. The plan has been approved by the expert panel and the ministry will notify municipalities of this new measure. (Boldface emphasis added)

In other words, Japan wants, and requires by law, reporting of adverse reactions to the covid “vaccines.”

I strongly suspect that the reason it is doing so is because (1) adverse reactions are being under-reported, if reported at all, and that means (2) that any reports currently existing are questionable, and Japan wants to know what’s really going on.

It’s a polite, understated way of saying “we don’t believe you,” for consider what Japan is really saying as it attaches the warnings to the “vaccines”: “we don’t trust you, they are not ‘completely safe’ as the radio public service announcements in the USA from Health and Human Services have been saying.

And like it or not, that’s a huge break from the narrative, for while Austria and Germany are considering total lockdowns for the “unvaxxed”, Japan is saying the unvaxxed have very good reason to be skeptical.

See you on the flip side...
