

Jon Rappoport Speaks Out About WordPress Take-down of His Blog

Source: Jon Rappoport's newsletter

by Jon Rappoport

May 13, 2019

I say, "Dear Parents, All over the world they are injecting your children, from the day of their birth, with poisonous chemicals and germs, and they're calling it a miracle. But it isn't. It's devastating."

And then, someone somewhere behind a curtain who's hidden his name-badge in his underpants says, "Censor that man. Cut off his expression. He has no right to say what he's saying."

The Soulless Ones are at it again.

Many of you now know that, last Saturday, WordPress took down my blog without warning or notice. After 10 years—boom. Gone. We are in the process of restoring the blog through "other means." Meanwhile, my home page at NoMoreFakeNews.com is still up, and you can let others know to go there to sign up for the email list to receive my articles in their inbox on a regular basis. You can also order products at that same home page.

I strongly suspect that my articles criticizing vaccines triggered the censorship move. The justification would be: well, we must protect the health of the public and your influence could be quite negative in that regard, etc.

Information, evidence, opinion are all now subject to the preferences of “those in charge,” who of course “only have the best interests of The People at heart.” Sure.

The reality is: when there is something called official science, then unofficial science must be trampled on and stamped out—the word “official” tells you that authorities are pushing lies down on people’s heads and those lies must be maintained and never doubted. Unofficial science becomes dangerous. It contains repressed truth.

I’ve learned that first-hand over the past 35 years working as a reporter. All my major investigations have been “unofficial,” and in every one of those cases, there was someone standing in the middle of the road behind barricades shooing people away and warning that there was nothing OFFICIAL to see by going farther.

THE RIGHT TO HAVE AND EXPRESS AN OPINION OR VIEW OR FINDING are under attack. Structures that would enable persons to express an opinion publicly are censoring certain voices. They don’t have to give a reason. They just do it.

They might say a writer “violated community standards.” What community, and what standards? Oh, the ones they make up and pretend exist. Those communities and standards. Or perhaps “the community” they’re talking about is some collection of goody two-shoes robotic idiots they’ve convinced to form an organization and make a so-called mission statement in line with official truth. Blank minds, blank stares, earnest faces.

The age of rational argument and debate, if it ever existed, appears to be over. Now it’s just FIND THE CONTRARY VIEW and silence it.

Of course, I’m not the first person to be censored recently. And I’ve noticed that the black-listing hasn’t worked. Those independent reporters and analysts and editorialists and activists are still talking and writing. I’ll do the same.

You can help. Spread my articles any way you can. Get others on my email list. Consider ordering my three MATRIX collections. Get in touch with WordPress and let them know how you feel and what you think. Refuse to obey the Law of Silence.

There is a WE here. It isn't a collection of dumb know-nothings. It's many individuals who happen to have arrived, separately, at a similar place: the crossroad where a choice is made for justice and against surrender.

If you're not already there, get there. If you're there, make your presence count.

The game isn't lost. It isn't over.

It's never over.