'Medical Racism: The New Apartheid' Documentary Premiers Today

CHD's New Documentary, 'Medical Racism,' Premieres
Today

Watch today! "Medical Racism: The New Apartheid," illuminates the shocking history of human experimentation targeting Blacks by government health regulators and private pharmaceutical companies.

by Children's Health Defense Team
March 11, 2021

The new documentary, "Medical Racism: The New Apartheid" premieres today. You can watch it for free by visiting the "Medical Racism" website. The film is co-produced by Children's Health Defense, Centner Productions, Kevin Jenkins of the Urban Global Health Alliance, Rev. Tony Muhammed and author/historian Curtis Cost.

"Medical Racism" illuminates the shocking history of human experimentation targeting Blacks by government health regulators and private pharmaceutical companies.

Many Americans are familiar with the historic medical atrocities committed by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention at Tuskegee, by the father of American gynecology, Dr. J. Marion Sims on South Carolina slave girls and the continuing medical larceny against Henrietta Lacks. But most people are likely unaware of the routine medical barbarism against Africans that persists today.

"Medical Racism" pulls back the curtain on experimentation atrocities hiding in plain sight and takes us on an unprecedented journey to unearth the truth.

The powerful documentary reveals:

- That medical racism has happened before, and why we're raising awareness to make sure it doesn't happen again
- How racism in the drug industry impacts the Black community
- Why, when our bodies and risk are involved, it shouldn't be about governmental control
- How to feel empowered to have a voice about your health choices

"'Medical Racism' is the most powerful and important documentary ever produced on medical experimentation and other abuses against African Americans and African people on the continent of Africa," said Curtis Cost, author of "Vaccines Are Dangerous — A Warning to the Global Community." "I am extremely proud of Robert F. Kennedy Jr. for having the courage to produce this desperately needed documentary."

Cost added: "It was Sen. Ted Kennedy who brought the Tuskegee syphilis experiments to an end. It was President John F. Kennedy who had the courage to send troops to defend the civil rights of African-Americans. Now, Robert F. Kennedy Jr. continues that tradition with this film. As an African-American, I am extremely proud to be part of this film and all of the amazing people who contributed to making this film possible."

On March 6, "Medical Racism" was shown at the Jubilee Film Festival which showcases films produced about the universal struggle to uphold the dignity of man. The festival provides a venue for films exploring current social problems and their solutions.

Children's Health Defense Chairman Robert F. Kennedy, Jr.

participated in a panel discussion after the film.

Watch the panel discussion here:

The film festival is a part of the annual Bridge Crossing Jubilee in Selma, Alabama, an event which commemorates "Bloody Sunday," the day when a long line of peaceful demonstrators were brutally attacked by Alabama state troopers as they crossed the Edmund Pettus Bridge on Sunday, March 7, 1965. President Lyndon Baines Johnson, outraged by what happened in Alabama, addressed a joint session of Congress on the issue of voting rights for all Americans and later signed the Voting Rights Act on Aug. 6, 1965.

It's crucial "Medical Racism: The New Apartheid" reaches as large an audience as possible to ensure that these abysmal practices will finally end. Be sure to share this movie with your friends and family.

By learning from the misdeeds of the past, we can avoid repeating them. Find out how you can stop the abuse by watching the movie for free at MedicalRacism.org.