

Pandemic 2: Monkeypox Madness

Monkeypox – it's the hip new disease sweeping the globe. Allegedly appearing almost simultaneously in over a dozen different countries on four different continents.

As we wrote in the early days of the Covid "pandemic", the only thing spreading faster than the disease is fear.

The media reported the first UK case of monkeypox on the 7th of May. Less than two weeks later, we're seeing some very familiar headlines. Just like that...Pandemic 2: Monkey Pox!! begins playing at all your favorite fear porn outlets.

Sky News tells us that UK Monkeypox "cases" have "doubled\(!\)"...from 10 to 20.

The BBC went real subtle with it, blaring: "Monkeypox: Doctors concerned over impact on sexual health"

The New Scientist has actually used the P-word, asking "Can Monkeypox become a new pandemic?", before answering, essentially, "probably no, but also maybe yes!". Keeping their options open.

Science warns that "Monkeypox outbreak questions intensify as cases soar"

The Mirror has gone full paranoid already, headlining:

Russia looked into using monkeypox as biological weapon,

claims ex soviet scientist

So that's one direction the story might go.

To be clear, "monkeypox" (whatever that even means in this context), is NOT a Russian bio-weapon. It's not a Western bio-weapon either. Or Chinese bio-weapon. It's just another scare story. And a rushed, half-hearted one at that.

One of the signs that marked the Covid "pandemic" as a psy-op from an early stage was the sheer speed with which the hysteria spread. Far from learning from their mistakes, the powers-that-be have decided to go even faster this time.

Despite "cases" numbering barely in the dozens, the World Health Organization has called an emergency meeting, a strange thing to do when their annual Assembly starts literally tomorrow. But I guess when your launching a new product you need to do everything you can to get the hype going.

Despite just two "cases" in the entire United States (and indeed the fact they still don't work), New York is bringing back mask recommendations.

Nobody has said "lockdown"...yet. But Hans Kluge, WHO regional director for Europe, is "concerned" that transmission could accelerate if people attend mass gatherings:

as we enter the summer season ... with mass gatherings, festivals and parties, I am concerned that transmission could accelerate".

(As inflation soars and the cost of living crisis only gets worse, it's probably handy for them to have a new "public health" reason to ban protests or clampdown on civil unrest. Just a thought.)

There's some good news though...for vaccine manufacturers, anyway. As Whitney Webb reports, two struggling pharmaceutical companies have already seen a big stock boost from the “outbreak”:

Regardless of how the monkeypox situation plays out, two companies are already cashing in. As concern over monkeypox has risen, so too have the shares of Emergent Biosolutions and SIGA Technologies. Both companies essentially have monopolies in the US market, and other markets as well, on smallpox vaccines and treatments. Their main smallpox-focused products are, conveniently, also used to protect against or treat monkeypox as well. As a result, the shares of Emergent Biosolutions climbed 12% on Thursday, while those of SIGA soared 17.1%.

Just as with Covid, and despite rumours they would be leaving the World Health Organization, Russia appears to be lining up with the WHO agenda. Already they are “tightening border quarantine” rules, vaccinating healthcare workers and supplying quick bedside tests internationally.

Looks like we might be in for an epic summer of scare-mongering, panic-buying & bucketloads of cringe.

Are the new jabs already prepped & ready to go?

Are the “our hospitals are overwhelmed videos” being filmed as we speak, complete with “monkey pox” moulage and crying nurses who turn out to have IMDB pages & multiple acting credits?

Are the sleepy masses going to be fooled yet again?

Watch this space...
