

Quo Vadis?

Quo Vadis?

“Quō vādīs is a Latin phrase meaning “Where are you marching?”. It is also commonly translated as “Where are you going?” or, poetically, “Whither goest thou?”.

Which way are we going? That’s not just a collective question, especially when it’s so clear where this is all recklessly headed. But it’s always an individual question. Do we align with social norms and in this case global draconian control and adopt that fear based mind set? Or do we have a personal recourse and unshaken freedom even in the midst of all of this?

That’s kind of a trick question. It depends on how and through which awareness we look at all of this. To submit to fear is to align with the program and your mind and actions will follow. To whatever degree. While this external insanity clearly exists and we seem to be flushed down the system stream of things, we always have profound autonomy and free will.

What direction in our personal lives are we taking, be it mental or spiritual? Where are we individually going in our inner being and therefore outward expression? Where are our true inner convictions about life and existence? Do we see through and beyond this madness and enjoy inner peace and clarity, just as we could have perceived all along during calmer times? Or are we being overwhelmed with stimulus/response programming and denying our inner being?

There is always freedom of choice. How we steer our personal ships in this life, either consciously or circumstantially, is always up to us.

That cannot be taken away despite the insane rantings of the control grid psychopaths. They've always been operating in plain sight, just now they've come out full force – arrogant and blustery as the so-called Devil himself. The beauty of this experience is the opportunity to realize this and see our inner heart and voice come alive.

A Time of Immense Opportunity and Awakening

This predicament begs the entire issue of the dualistic nature of our existence. We are two types of being in one. We live in these amazing life forms called human bodies, incredibly intricate creations born onto a planet with its own seeming laws and subsequently imposed social paradigms. Then there is this knowing “soul” within us, virtually looking THROUGH each one of us.

It's real. It's who we truly are.

This paradox has been the quandary of pundits, philosophers and religious teachers throughout the ages.

What's happening in our external world now, as disruptive and disturbing as it is, is clearly a time of opportunity to awaken to deeper truths. If people's individual lives have not yet given birth to deeper realizations, all of this can be extremely troubling and confining, or it can give birth to who we truly are.

Some have pursued these deeper questions diligently as part of their life paths. Others, as death eventually does for all, are facing these questions full on in the face of this global takeover with very personal consequences on their personal freedom and quality of life.

It's Nothing New – Only Intensely Condensed and Magnified

I have no doubt every human has given these issues some thought at some level. Religion and belief systems have given various degrees of satisfaction to those who have aligned with such ways of thinking, looking for comfort and solace, as well as default answers to the deeper questions we all inwardly ask. Most answers we are "told" are way stations that are simply hooks for people to hang their hats on. It wasn't all that important to most, just a nagging question perhaps in the back of their minds. Now they come alive!

"If you don't stand for something, you'll fall for anything"

So how does this apply now? As it always has, only it's massively magnified. Fear is jolting most people's psyche on many levels. Will I see my loved ones again? Will I be tracked and categorized as many nations are either doing or proposing as is clearly coming down the pipe?

That's not a small question.

This has never been so true on such a scale. Many of us knew this was coming – for ages. We were mocked and vilified and marginalized. Even now as this blatant fulfillment of every warning unfolds it will intensify and may mean standing in a very precarious place.

So what. That doesn't matter. It never did, but now less than ever.

We stand in conscious infinite awareness, our souls untainted by this madness.

Stand. It will pass, and we may with it.

It really doesn't matter.

Letting go of this worldly illusion has never been a bigger, more awesome and empowering opportunity.
