

The AGENDA 2030 SMART CITY Challenge – Government to AWARD $75 Million For Best SMART CITY Design

Source: Press For Truth

November 15, 2018

<https://youtu.be/uNFdmSpR1Gc>

Google's parent company Alphabet Inc. owns a company called Sidewalk labs and they are working with the Canadian government to launch a new "smart city" at the waterfront of downtown Toronto called "Quayside". Quayside is proposing a centralized identity management system which each resident uses to access public services such as library cards and health care. Other plans include driverless cars, "mixed-use" spaces that change according to the market's demands, heated streets, and "sensor-enabled waste separation."

In this video Dan Dicks of Press For Truth takes a deep look at how our governments are jumping in bed with the big tech companies to form a surveillance state they are calling "smart cities" in a big brother nightmare the like of which George Orwell himself couldn't have even envisioned.

DONATE → <https://www.paypal.me/PressforTruth>

PATREON → <https://www.patreon.com/PressForTruth>