

The Calm Before the Shift

The Calm Before the Shift

by Zen Gardner

March 28, 2015

There appears to be a growing sentiment that we're on the verge of some kind of significant breakthrough. Not the obvious crackdown of the PTBs, but a good move forward for conscious humanity. It seems to be an awareness step of some sort, but this next stage is becoming more and more palpable. Many have talked about these energetic changes and the consciousness shift we're in the midst of, but even within that we can sense levels of relative change and I'm hearing it from all sides. There's an unraveling going on as the awakened become empowered, but many dynamics are involved.

Is it related to this feeling of a calm before a storm on the world stage, a version of our own anticipation clearly known amongst the awakened?

Yes.

The difference is the awakened are not reactive, but responsive and even proactive. We follow our hearts and feel out what's transpiring. While the compulsion and near infatuation with keeping track of the mounting manipulative deeds of the usurpers consumes a lot of alternative attention, we can also sense these hard to perceive shifts in perspective that continue to surface.

They happen for our own encouragement and help to mark our points of progress in what we're accomplishing and where we're going.

More importantly, seeing these definitive integrated, staged changes helps to articulate these progressions. This isn't just the overall "shift" we're in the midst of, but a clear staged move into a post awakened awareness and understanding of where we are at in this present moment.

Spiritual Resignation – or the Pause that Refreshes?

The current trend that I'm personally sensing is almost a spiritual resignation taking place. Not in a negative "I give up" tone, but more a realization of what is about to take place and the many practical preparations. Many are finding that helping those who aren't willing to be helped, or those who aren't willing to be made aware of this nearing point, as a futile form of redundancy.

"Why try? They don't want it..."

In other words, what people are meant to do they'll do, or not do. It's really up to them to wake up or not. This feeling is triggered by the auto-response mechanism they all seem to display – "no, no, and more no. It's not possible, it can't be, and you're full of conspiracy crap" yada yada.

My take? It's true. Walk away from the dead and go find the living. We have serious work to do.

It's much like the age old philosophical argument between free will and determinism. Just because we run up against dead heads doesn't mean we stop doing what we're doing. We march on in spite of thuggish attitudes and mindless opposition.

The fun thing is, another mechanism is seeping in and we need to understand it clearly.

The Truther and the Fatalist – Are They Merging?

While awakened souls feel compelled to reach out and tell others what has become intensely clear to them, they're also continually processing the more subtle changes around them and what they are indicating. There is no set agenda, there are no set protocols except love and a strong desire for truth.

But what happens when the mission seems to come to an end? What happens when the campaigner thinks it's become futile, the die is cast, the worm has turned, the tables are fixed?

I'm not saying that's the case across the board, but it's a reality seeping in and I'm not afraid of it, as active as I am. I can understand that type of resignation and the decision to pull back and prepare for the changeover. It's very realistic.

In my mind that's not what I endorse, although I have taken precautions in my own life along those lines and encouraged others to do the same. Keeping at the battle every chance I get is what I live for. But I think I'm catching the drift of the "resignationist".

It's all about to happen and people aren't listening.

But they can.

More importantly, let people want to wake up and decide for themselves. If they're not hungry, you can't make 'em hungry. Leading a horse to water, no matter how compelling or entertaining, will not make it drink. But there's an inner desire on the part of all living creatures.

Freed to Take Care of Business

We need to each learn to deal with this dilemma ourselves and act on it. I will not endorse reluctance, compliance, giving up or yielding to the dystopic negative entropic forces in any way, shape or form. But this wave of spiritual sensation is a profound one, and nothing to be ashamed of if you're feeling it.

The reason? We ARE there. It IS all about to blow. Maybe folks are being freed to go about their lives to get their things in order, prepare loved ones, concentrate their energy on immediate matters.

If that's the case, that's wonderful. We're all supposed to be going about getting our lives and homes in order, but sometimes we need to be freed from other perceived obligations. This isn't necessarily everyone's "reason" for disengaging from the battle but I hope it does some potential explaining and liberating.

For everyone.

Keep on. Very strange times we're passing through. Be aware, be conscious, be ready, be responsible.

Hang on and let go. You'll know what to do. Just do what calls you.

From your heart.

Much love – Zen

Zen Gardner is an impactful and controversial author and speaker with a piercing philosophical viewpoint. His writings have been circulated to millions and his personal story has caused no small stir amongst the entrenched alternative pundits. His book You Are the Awakening has met rave reviews and is available on amazon.com. You Are the Awakening examines the dynamics of the awakening to a more conscious awareness of who we are and why we are here – dynamics which are much different from the programmed approach of this world we were born into.