

A Time of Revelation

I don't know about you but the schism between truth and lies seems to be widening pretty drastically lately with a lot of confusion and disorientation sewn into the mix.

Just recently I've seen friends facing personal upheavals, con jobs, personal attacks from very strange quarters, new and very revealing understandings of personal perspectives and relationships, and just about everything, for myself as well.

It's like we're viewing the perceived world as being fractured into shards of broken off new perspectives to be grasped and understood, making the big picture that much more lucid.

If we connect the dots.

I've said for a long time the split between the willing awakeners and the willful asleep would widen and we'd see more and more psychotic behavior on the part of the truth resistant. The revelation of what's really going on within these vectors of society, as well as in the so called Truth movement, are something to look out for and be consciously aware of.

Apocalypse Now

Apocalypse means the unveiling, the revealing, hence the term revelation. Quite a far cry from the end of the world, it's just an end of a very limited understanding and the opening of another.

As the world becomes more and more aware of what is really driving society, via enlightened thought, archeological and scientific or otherwise discoveries of profound truths about our realm and where we came from, our dimensional reality, the real history of our planet etc., things take on whole new dimensions even for mainstream thinkers.

Settled science is famous for concealing not just information, but its implications. That's really the world we're up against. "Mustn't make any rash decisions or paradigm shifts. We're still processing this data"...yada yada.

We're in for a fun and wild ride. Things are going to be revealed that are going to peel eyeballs back. Then observers are going to have to deal with the cognitive dissonance as mainstream purveyors make mush out of what could be empowering truth which the unaware will have to swallow. As the information field shifts and steps up its vibrational intensity we're going to be seeing some real doozies and these seeming controllers won't be able to keep their tracks covered.

Meanwhile we're experiencing what we're experiencing, faster than any mainstream or even alternative narrative can keep up with.

There's so much being released as this fractured shift and partition of the old paradigm takes place it will be mind boggling. But a great ride to take nonetheless...if you're conscious, awake and aware...and on the offensive.

The Moral of the Story?

Don't let it throw you, but pay attention to all of this. It might be seeping up through some personal issues you might have but let it bubble up and see it for what it is. Maybe dreams are surfacing to your consciousness, or old relationships or new situations are under scrutiny. Just pay attention.

Truth invites inspection. Never be afraid.

We are being empowered by the mightiest force in the Universe. The Universe itself. We can steer through this madness with calmness of heart and soul and a determined mind, or let it disturb us and send us into lower level thinking and vibration.

The choice is ours.

Don't let anything throw you. Examine everything carefully in conscious awareness, and never fear your conclusions, or path along the way.

Trusting our awakened hearts is imperative.

Steady on your way.

Much love always, Zen
